Quick Summary

Former prosecutor, white collar lawyer, and political campaign newcomer who became the first black woman and first LGBT person elected mayor of Chicago as an insurgent reformer

- Humble upbringing in working class northern Ohio. Financial struggles and father's disability fueled passion for social justice and equity
- Prosecuted drug conspiracies, corruption, and fraud as an Assistant U.S. Attorney
- In city government, was tasked with investigating police misconduct and developing a police accountability task force
- Background working in white shoe law firm representing large corporations and as a prosecutor frustrates some activists who question her progressive credentials
- Insurgent reform candidate who beat establishment-favorite candidates to win 2019 Chicago mayor's race
- Education is a top issue, influenced by her wife's career in education and mother's role as a school board member

Approach and Motivations

Collaborative, community-facing "one city" approach

- Made transparency and communication hallmarks of her campaign for mayor
- Believes listening tours and hearing from community stakeholders is the smartest way to approach bold policies
- Designs policies that benefit the socio-economically depressed south and west sides of Chicago and divert resources to those communities

Rooting out corruption

- Reformer mentality whose approach is to root out corruption from within, often with new political appointments and auditing processes
- Has used executive action to curtail what she views as excessive power, including limiting aldermanic privilege for council members

Policy Positions and Areas of Focus

Humble upbringing sparked interest in advancing social justice and ending corruption

Police Reform: Shaped by years in police oversight and Laquan McDonald shooting

- Cites Obama-era DOJ report on Chicago police force as basis for police reform policies
- Chaired task force that compelled then-Mayor Emanuel to abolish controversial police disciplinary agency and create new one
- Pushed for complete re-design of community policing to train officers in better understanding the dynamics of the neighborhoods they patrol

Educational Reforms: Positions herself as a reformer who avoids catering to developers

- Supported freeze on new charter schools when entering office; criticized Emanuel admin for closing 50 neighborhood schools without sufficient community engagement
- Believes in standardizing community planning, establishing a comprehensive development plan, and criticizes developer-centric planning

Ethics Reforms: Anti-corruption served as cornerstone of mayoral campaign

- Pledged to create non-partisan city council ward map redistricting process and implement term limits for mayor and council chairmanships
- Issued executive order to curb aldermanic privilege by abolishing council member veto power over licenses and permits

Gun Violence and Public Safety: Collaborative approach with federal agencies, favoring new, pro-active investment streams

- Views gun violence as a public health problem and favors investing in distressed communities
- Favors collaboration with federal agencies and U.S. attorney's office to stop flow of illegal guns from other states
- Wants to increase resources devoted to violence interruption techniques as a pro-active measure to curb violent crime

Core Communities

Maintains diverse network of activists, insiders and business ties throughout city

Daley-era Influencers: Despite running against establishment, has close ties to Daley allies

- Mary Dempsey, Library Commissioner under Mayor Richard Daley and current President of DePaul College Prep, was an original backer of Lightfoot and gave her $50,000 early in the race
- Former Dept. of Environment Commissioner under Daley, Suzanne Malec-McKenna, was an early supporter and served on her transition

Chicago/Illinois LGBT: Early support from LGBT community helped propel mayoral candidacy

- State Rep Kelly Cassidy was an early supporter; the two met through ACLU
- Jennifer Pritzker, the only transgender billionaire, was a supporter and served on her transition team

Chicago Legal Community: Forged relationships on both sides of the aisle

- Close with Len Goodman, criminal-defense attorney and top investor in the Chicago Sun-Times, who was a major donor in her campaign
- Connected to senior lawyers at former firm Mayer Brown, including former Illinois Attorney General Ty Fahn

Chicago Progressive Reform Activists: Received key support from renowned community organizers and political activists

- Don Rose, activist and former press secretary to MLK, is a key ally and political consultant who helped her win the mayor's race
- Brought in Manuel Perez as campaign manager, and later as a legislative affairs advisor, who is credited as the progressive force behind U.S. Rep. Chuy Garcia
- Remains close to the Better Government Association board, government watchdog group whose board she served on, including previous board president Dave Lundy
